

The Mediumistic Senses

Clairvoyance (seeing) 	Clairvoyance (from the French clair meaning "clear" and voyant meaning "seeing") is the ability to use the mediumistic ability of tuning into the vibration of spirit and using the sense of sight to gain information about an object, location, event or person in spirit. The images given to the medium are not seen by others in the room (apart from occasions when another medium shares the link)
Clairsentience (feeling) 	Clairsentience [From the French clair, "clear," and sentience, "feeling," is the name given to the mediumistic ability to connect with spiritual vibrations, energies to acquire psychic knowledge or awareness of people in spirit and the vents and energies they bring with them in memory links primarily by means of physical feeling or sensation. There are many different degrees of clairsentience ranging from the perception of diseases of other people to the thoughts or emotions of other people. When such conditions relate to people on the earth plain, clairsentience is being used in combination with psychic ability. Psychometry is related to clairsentience.
Clairaudience (hearing) 	Clairaudience [from the French clair (clear) and audience (hearing)] is a form of spiritual perception where a person acquires information by auditory means while tuning into spiritual vibrations. It is often considered to be a form of clairvoyance although that term has become a generic term for mediumistic ability while clairaudience is specifically the ability to hear spirit, as seeing (clairvoyance) and feeling (clairsentience) although some people can achieve all three simultaneously or one at a time and use them in combination.. Clairaudient people have psi-mediated hearing. Clairaudience may refer not to actual perception of sound, but may instead indicate impressions of the "inner mental ear" similar to the way many people think words without having auditory impressions. But it may also refer to actual perception of sounds such as voices, tones, or noises which are not apparent to other humans or to recording equipment.
Clairience (smelling) 	Clairience from the French clair (clear) and alience (smelling)] uses the sense of smell in combination with spiritual attunement to obtain impression and information from the spirit world in the form of aromas which convey an impression of a person in spirit or an aroma (such as tobacco smoke) associated with that person to give evidence of their presence. This is normally used in combination with other mediumistic senses
Clairgustance (tasting) 	Clairgustance combines the mediumistic ability to connect with spirit with the sense of taste in order to convey impressions of a person in spirit and something related to taste (either a taste they particularly liked or disliked) in order to provide a personalised message to the person being read for. Clairgustance allows the medium to taste a substance without putting anything in their mouth.
Claircognizance (knowing) 	Claircognizance [from the French clair (clear) and connaissance, knowledge]] is a form of extra-sensory perception in that unlike the other mediumistic sense listed above which make use of each of the human senses claircognizance describes where a person acquires knowledge primarily by means of intrinsic knowledge gained through attunement to spirit. It is the ability to know something without knowing how or why you know it. To see how this differs from psychic ability, see below.
Psychic ability 	Strictly speaking, psychic ability is not a mediumistic sense but an ability possessed by all of us and one which mediums use in combination with their mediumistic skills. Each of us, whether on the earth plain or in spirit are energy fields and operate on our own unique frequency. The ability to "tune in" to another person's frequency and obtain information about them, their emotions, situations, likes and dislikes etc is something which we all possess and use from time to time. Psychic skills essentially relate to tuning into the energies of those people here on the earth plain while mediums are those people who have developed the abilities inherent in all of us to use both our psychic ability plus one or more of the mediumistic senses described above to enable us to attune our energies to both those on the earth plain and also those in spirit.
